Authorities to Control Wildlife

The ATCW system

without an ATCW.

In some areas, human activity and wildlife conflict. It is important that the needs of people and the protection of wildlife is balanced. In many cases this means people must adapt their practices to live with wildlife. The ATCW system provides authorisation to humanely control wildlife that are harmful to people's livelihoods, safety or the environment.

An ATCW is required to scare, trap, move or destroy wildlife. An applicant must demonstrate that the wildlife in question is damaging property, farmland or habitat, or posing a risk to the safety of people.

An ATCW for lethal control is only issued as a last resort and when non-lethal methods have been unsuccessful in resolving the problem or are impractical to implement. ATCW applications are assessed by Conservation Regualtor authorised officers.

Further information about the ATCW application process can be found at here.

All ATCWs include strict conditions to ensure that wildlife is controlled humanely. An ATCW stipulates the type of method that must be used to control the wildlife and any other restrictions that apply.

Anyone acting under an ATCW is required by law to comply with the conditions. Non-compliance is an offence under the Wildlife Act 1975.

Transparent approach to ATCWs

Information about the number of ATCWs issued can be accessed by the public.

The species, number of ATCWs and the number of animals authorised for control is outlined below.

The following table presents annual ATCW data for 2019.

Authority to Control Wildlife (ATCW) Data

Important information about this data

Number of animals

The data represents the maximum number of animals authorised for control. The actual number of animals that were controlled under each ATCW may be lower.

Lethal and non-lethal methods

The number of ATCWs represents the total number of authorisations issued for both lethal and non-lethal methods (for example, trap and release or trap).

Lethal control of wildlife is only issued as a last resort and when non-lethal methods have been unsuccessful at resolving the program or are impractical to implement.

Threatened species

ATCWs are sometimes issues for the non-lethal control of threatened species (for example Grey-headed Flying-foxes causing damage to property).
